Segment.01 Hello. I'm Jerry Scheidbach, pastor of the Lighthouse, and your brain masseur—get ready for your brain massage.

Hello to all my new friends in Washington — I had a wonderful time in the Emerald State — by the way, we are working up a new website for the Brain Massage show that will have my traveling calendar posted.

Cry baby Trump—really? There is a chance we'll have to deal with the spectacle of a US President whining and crying, "foul"—every time something does not go his way? What is with this guy! Did something happen when he was, in, like, Jr. High or something that stunted his growth—he acts like a—well, maybe he needs some testosterone therapy—but really—Trump, not very manly! Bad! Come on!

Cruz understands the rules — his team sent representatives into Colorado to meet with supporters and work to get Cruz supporters elected to be delegates, and the delegates to commit to Cruz. Cruz himself showed up, met the delegates, and won every one of them. Trump is saying the "PEOPLE" did not decide—so I guess Republicans in Colorado are not people?

Look, I'll explain how the Colorado caucus works, and all that, so you can know just how lame it is that Trump is whining about losing Colorado and accusing Cruz of "stealing" the delegates in Colorado—I really don't know how anyone can look at this guy as presidential. What a buffoon (from the Latin buffo, means clown—but the Latinos took it from the Scots who used it for a kind of pantomime dance—that's how I'm using it—watch his pantomime, his gestures communicate his message louder than his words do.)

You say—well, hey, he's not a "politician" so he does not know about all these rules and stuff—really? Wow! Then comes the, "that's unfair." Poor Donnie didn't know the rules, it's unfair.

He is running for President of the U.S., and he does not take the time to learn the rules, and then whines when he loses because of the rules? I guess it runs in the family—his son and daughter will not be able to vote for him in the New York Primary because they did not register as Republican before the deadline—rules, got 'em again. I guess if you are a billionaire you get used to ignoring the rules—you just buy what influence you need and...you know, if your business needs some workers, go ahead and hire some illegals, hey, the fine won't even be felt by a fat-cat like the Trump.

Can't you see him, with the cigar, the black top hat, looking at us from under that do while steepling with a grin and dollar signs for pupils flashing in his greedy eyes standing behind the Presidential Seal—Haha! With the conversation bubble over his head, thinking, "Hmmm, where is that widow that stopped me from using eminent domain to take her property from her for my hotel, ya, ah, ah!"

I assume Trump's kids are Democrats. Maybe they'll vote for family friend, and fellow New Yorker, Hillary Clinton—Their Dad, after all, a rich, successful Billionaire, said the economy does better when Democrats are in the White House than it does with Republicans—so! Listen to Daddy! Right?

Anyway, Trump is running for President and showing us what sort of President he will be. First, he won't bother to inform himself of the rules, he'll just run into something, half-cocked, unprepared, and make a mess, and then start whining and complaining and blaming everyone else for his failure to properly prepare.

Okay, in Colorado, the members of the Republican Party are the ones who decide who will be their delegates — candidates campaign to get members of the Republican Party to appoint delegates that will commit to them. I mean, if we go into the entire process, in detail, your eyes will gloss over—caucuses are more complicated than a straight up direct vote and counting of ballots—but, in some ways, it's better; it does require more personal involvement in the process. Conservatives, the types who believe in STATE'S RIGHTS, who believe in the 10th, who believe in the RULE OF LAW, and who think Republicans ought to decide the Party's candidate not cross over liberal Democrats—have no problem with what the Colorado Republican committee decides to do within the rules of the GOP.

But guys like Trump—if he won them in the same way, he would be saying, well, you know, those are the rules—but since the delegates all went to Cruz, well, now it's about Colorado not letting the PEOPLE decide—and Cruz stole the delegates! I mean, really, this is sick!

But I have told you all along—at the end of the day, it'll be revealed that it's all about stopping Cruz. That Cruz has gotten as far as he has is nothing short of a miracle of God's grace. Hey, "He that sitteth in the Heavens shall laugh, the LORD shall have them in derision." Psalm 2:4 — there he goes, spouting that Bible again! Haha! Yep! That's me. An old time Bible Thumper — so, what are you? A New Age stargazer! How about Nostril-Dufus prophecy gawker? An El Ron Hubbard Christ denying Scientologist.

“75 million years ago, an evil being named Xenu decided to solve a population problem on his galactic colony by exiling a bunch of people to Earth. When the souls started leaving the bodies, he captured the souls and forced them into a huge implant station and made them watch movies that ‘implanted’ them with false pictures of Christ, and other historical events that Hubbard says didn’t actually happen.”¹ Xenu—yeah! You can believe Xenu, but not Moses! Or, maybe you believe everything Alex Jones says—you know, that guy has disappointed me. I've gotten a lot from him over the years, but it's the same thing I've seen with these sorts of characters (it's happening now with Baldwin—spinning off into the netherlands of irrationality—George Bush, a Neocon—uh, actually, no!

The Neocon movement began among Democrats in the 60s who were concerned about the direction their party was trending in foreign affairs—true, Neocons are "outspoken advocate[s] for aggressive and, if necessary, unilateral action by the United States to promote democracy, human rights, and free markets and to maintain U.S. primacy around the world,"² (and, of course, this is all interpreted as using American military power to make munitions traders rich, and—as an aside—the NRA secretly insured Obama's election in order to increase gun sales in America—think!) and true, Neocons have, in the past, advocated the toppling of Saddam Hussein, and other brutal dictators around the world who ram their jack boots into the backs of the people they subjugate and enslave them, and of course, this has nothing to do with those policies, the truth is they just want to kill a bunch of people because it's a fun way to make a lot of money)—and so when Bush II employed the force of the U.S. to do exactly that, that proves he is a Neocon—or somehow under their control—these folks have such tunnel vision, they cannot see that it's just possible there would be ANOTHER reason motivating Bush to go into Iraq—like maybe he did it as a strategy to stop another 9-11, to keep them so busy over there, and to, in fact, establish a presence there for them to contend with, and as a bonus, who knows, maybe a taste of freedom will mean something in time, and maybe, well, you know, maybe the BIBLE prophecy that Iraq will be transformed into a humanitarian country will be fulfilled—besides, Bush II consistently opposed Neocon policies otherwise all along—so, anyway!).

And, I'll tell you what bothers me about Alex Jones—here is a headline from InfoWars: "Roger Stone: Cruz Campaign Behind Mugging of Schlafly" — story? Four leaders of Eagle Forum are trying to get 91 year-old Schlafly removed as CEO of Eagle Forum. Since these four leaders of Eagle Forum are Cruz supporters, then it's the Cruz Campaign that is behind it! I cannot tell you how much of my time has been wasted over the last four or five years running down this sort of thing coming from Jones only to find it leads to a dead-end. When I was first introduced to InfoWars, several years ago, I was intrigued and found much of his information was solid. Over the years, he has become an empty-shirt-sensationalist—it's simply this — I cannot trust his information — so much of it is like this headline story.

I am aware that many of my listeners also listen to Baldwin and Jones — I'm so glad to have you in my audience. One thing you can depend on, I'll never lead you into a dead end. If I can't document my statements of fact and fully support my suppositions, I'll tell you so.

For example, I have theories about why some of these guys start off right-on and then go off into what O'Reilly calls the spin zone—but because plausibility arguments are not proofs—I don't know offer this observation as fact—I offer it for what it is...a supposition.

Maybe they get addicted to the attention they receive to their sensationalist statements and lose their focus on objective truth and start going with anything that jazzes their audience—Or, maybe someone is slipping aspartame into their water, or something! hahah.

I get that there is a globalist agenda and a conspiracy to move the world toward a one world government subordinating our national interests to the control of the UN, for example, and I'll be addressing these conspiracy theories, and sorting out fact from fiction, sense from sensation, in my series The Master Conspiracy on Sunday nights, 6 pm. By the way, I'm home for the next three months—oh yeah!—then, Lord willing, I go to Lebanon! So, for the next several weeks I'll be addressing conspiracy theories in my Issachar Report, sorting out the sense from the sensational—Sundays, 6 pm.

But, back to today's brain massage—

The plausibility of something is not proof for anything. Okay, plausibility is not proof. I know it's totally plausible that a loser alcoholic could be a CIA agent, but, plausibility is not proof. Glen Beck—a CIA plant, dedicated to promoting the conspiracy trio of Trump, Cruz, and Hillary—all very plausible—but plausibility is not proof.

So while some conservatives hesitate to support Cruz because of the "plausibility" that he is a Mason, a member of the Illuminati, and involved in a conspiracy of one-world dominionism—intent on setting up a Theocracy—they prefer Trump who is in a conspiracy to get Hillary elected—Hah! Hey, even CNN sees it.³ Eric Bradner reminds us "The Republican presidential front-runner has a long history of positive statements about Democrats — he was one himself earlier in his life, he's said — and Clinton specifically. He's donated to Democrats. The Clintons attended Trump's wedding. Their daughters, Chelsea Clinton and Ivanka Trump — are friends. 'I just like her,' Trump said before. 'I just like her and her husband.'"⁴

Carly Fiorina sees it—and I'm glad she did the most conservative thing she's ever done in deciding to endorse Cruz—Carly said "Donald Trump is Hillary Clinton's Christmas gift wrapped up under a tree."⁵

All these false claims about Cruz stealing elections, here is what I think Trump is doing — I think he is establishing his justification for going third party if he does not get the Republican nomination.

Okay, gotta go to a break—God raises up rulers and puts them down. He gives to us the inalienable right to choose our own rulers. As Sovereign, He requires his children to do it "by Him"; that is, we are instructed to vote for "him whom God shall choose" and He gives us specific criteria to evaluate whether a candidate should get our vote in Deuteronomy 17:15-17.

You say, a Christian can't get elected—I say, God is bigger than that, and He will decide based on what HIS PEOPLE DO—not what the world does. So, when the children of disobedience, governed by the SPIRIT of the prince and the power of the air (Ephesians 2:2) uses dirty tricks to make it look like the New York audience was paying rapt attention to Trump and Kassich but ignored Cruz—these devilish devices and deceitful tricks will backfire on them: I'm praying

Psa. 5:10 "Destroy thou them, O God; let them fall by their own counsels; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee."

Segment.02 Hello. Welcome back! I'm Jerry Scheidbach, pastor at the Lighthouse, your brain masseur, and Paul Revere's lantern lighter, lighting the lamps in the church belfry arch, signaling the enemy is on the march, an enemy that would steal from us our liberty.

Ran a bit over time in the first segment. Trump whines when he loses because he has built his campaign on winning—and he has to provide a rationale his supporters can deal with when he loses.

I want to address some of the negatives brought to my attention about Cruz—those that are related to his connection to the various conspiracy theories about globalization, and subordinating American sovereignty to the UN and so forth, will be addressed in my series Sunday nights over the next several weeks as I separate the sensational from the sensible concerns—not directly related to Cruz, by the way—but indirectly! When you rightly understand the sense of these conspiracy theories and separate from that the sensationalists overlay that distorts the true picture — the rest falls into place and the bottom line is that Cruz in no way has any interest in subordinating America's national Sovereignty to the UN or any other power outside of the U.S. or that is extra-Constitutional — that is, outside of the authority of the Constitution — he is a Constitutionalist conservative. He is no more involved in any conspiracy to overthrow the Republic than was George Washington. He is the most Washingtonian presidential candidate to come along in a very long while. Note, Washingtonian, not Jeffersonian—but that's for another time.

However, one thing has come up lately that will not likely be addressed in my series—allegations that Cruz is not a sincere Christian because he uses foul language. I think he offended the sensibilities of some Christians when he said to Trump, "Leave Heidi the H- alone."

Now, the word hell is a Bible word, but we certainly don't approve of trivializing such a solemn subject as hell fire—

And, I am aware of my audience, that many of you are not Christians, although if my feedback is reflective of my audience, most of you are. I also know that probably most of the Christians I have in my audience are like most Christians today, and are regularly exposed to words like hell, and damn, and, well some other expletives — and probably would not make an issue of Cruz' statement.

I'm guessing that any Christian who feels he or she cannot vote for Cruz because he used the word hell as curse, or a profane way, a profanity, to express anger, will certainly not vote for Trump who drops the 'F' bomb repeatedly in some of his rallies—vulgarizing God's marriage gift, and joining that growing chorus who favor the use of that term, practically as a shibboleth identifying those who wish to distance themselves from our "old fashioned" Christian influenced cultural values, "whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness." Romans 3:14

I certainly do not approve of Cruz' use of that language. However, I don't think too many of us would not be willing to cut him some slack if this was not his customary manner of speech, especially given the circumstance in which it was provoked—no excuse—but, still!

Also, and I might lose some of my more fastidious Christian support here—but I don't think, if that is the extent of the accusation, he told Trump to "Leave Heidi the H- alone" — no, that is not enough for me to say I can't vote for Cruz. Many of you, especially those of you who grew up in secular schools, and perhaps in non-Christian homes, find yourself slipping with an H-word from time to time.

But this gives me an opportunity to address something I think that is very important.

No candidate is going to be a perfect specimen of holiness. Our Founders certainly were not! As for our Pastors, there is quite a bit of variety of colorfulness in personalities, shall we say—some that goes way too far, in my opinion. How holy must a candidate be?

It's interesting that the qualifications outlined in Deuteronomy 17:15-17 do not stipulate any standard that Abraham, or David, did not meet—these are great leaders chosen by God to lead His people, and they were not perfectly consistent examples of godliness, or holiness.

Anyway, let's take up the constant drone string—Cruz is a liar!

It reminds me of when the Dems go on and on about Bush is a liar, there were no WMDs. Fact, WMDs were found—although never in the abundance anticipated. Fact, many reliable sources offered testimony and compelling evidence that Iraq moved their WMDs out of the country before — but this has never been proved. Fact, the Intelligence branches of all Western powers said Saddam had WMDs—so they were all lying—and here is the bottom line, those who hate Bush, and are convinced he is a bad man purposely leading our country to ruin, believe and are convinced, he knowingly used false claims of WMDs to get support for a war he wanted to engage in for nefarious reasons—that it had nothing to do with the simple idea of executing wrath upon an evil doer, establishing expanding our front in our war against terrorism over there, and exporting some freedom to others along the way.

Let's take the Cruz lied about never supporting a path to citizenship claim. Watch closely.

I have to summarize because of time, and because it's just too tedious. But you can get my notes and read the entire document that does the best job I've seen trying to assemble the time line that proves Cruz is a liar about him taking point on the "no-path-to-citizenship immigration issue."⁶

Cruz entered the Senate in Jan. of 2013 advancing the policy that the only right way to deal with our illegal migration problem is to enforce the laws.

Later that month, an immigration bill was advanced by the "gang of 8." It included a "path to citizenship." Cruz objected to it—not the Bill as a whole, but to the part that included a "path to citizenship."

Note, he did not object to the overall bill, only that it provided a "path to citizenship."

This guy, Saletan, who wrote this article titled A HISTORY OF DECEPTION, admitted that Cruz expressed deep concerns about this provision in the bill—sounds consistent to me—he said that "Cruz could have ruled that provision out." What? Cruz was not on the gang of eight. He could not "rule it out." (Probably, what Saletan means is, Cruz could have simply said, I reject that provision in the Bill—but instead, said stuff like, "I have deep reservations about that provision in the Bill." So, because Cruz did not, at that moment, commit to never vote for the Bill so long as it had that provision—CRUZ IS A LIAR!

This is unbelievable to me! I, I just don't what to say. Except, if only you would look at Trump under the magnifying glass you use to examine Cruz—this is utter nonsense.

I mean, you don't even have to a stinking politician to understand that in human concourse, when working out big decisions, like where will you go for vacation—you might entertain a suggestion you don't like for a while in the course of conversation, and come down hard when it's necessary.

A lie would be if Cruz said I'm fine with the Bill as it is—having before claimed to be against any path to citizenship.

Who knows—he might have wanted to work WITH his fellow Republicans and maintain some place at the table for the discussion, and try to convince them to drop the path to citizenship provision — I mean, this is too much.

Cruz cannot be human! It's not possible. If he is human, forget it, no way will some you vote for him. But Trump—we'll take him flaws and all. His inconsistencies are excused, his behavior is overlooked—but Cruz — man, we are going to HOLD HIM TO THE STANDARD —

Cruz was asked, "will you vote for anything that has a path to citizenship." He refused to answer. Well, now, that proves it. He is a liar. He said nothing, so we know he is a liar. Sometimes you don't answer—and that might or might not mean you want to keep the option open. It might mean in a specific situation, that you don't want to feed the lion trying to eat you for lunch. After all, it's true that at that time, a "path to citizenship" was popular—was this interviewer trying to entice Cruz into a trap?

I'm more interested in what Cruz DID DO — than I am in a question he didn't answer.

Cruz tried to work with his compatriots—he offered a compromise of sorts, a way illegals could get legal status without being deported, but with NO PATH TO CITIZENSHIP. He said, "there probably could be a compromise if a path to citizenship is taken off the table."

Sorry, folks, but so far, Cruz is being 100% consistent with his commitment to no path to citizenship.

In May he offered a bill accordingly, and it was rejected on May 21st.

He went on the trail advocating for his plan—a green card approach with no path to citizenship.

Now, frankly, I don't like the compromise—I don't think people here illegally should be granted any sort of legality—

But, hey, let's all be honest. My guess is every one of you has grown to the position you now hold. At least I have. I've been thinking about this all the way back with Reagan and was very upset when he granted amnesty to the illegals here then, and I knew it would only encourage more of this—

But the spectacle of ICE rounding up thousands of mothers and fathers and children and at gun point marching them to busses and driving them across the border and dumping them off — listen, America was not ready for that back then. The problem has gotten to a place where many Americans are ready for that—but this has been a growing thing.

I don't buy it. When I read this carefully crafted lay out of Cruz' position on immigration—it seems perfectly consistent within the limits of human nature to be consistent. I mean, stuff like

KNOWING THE FUTURE and KNOWING how people will see things five years ahead, well, those are gifts reserve to folks like, uh, the brain masseur. Haha.
